Seven of the company's 12 directors today are women, representing an exceptional 58 percent of the company's board. Navient has the highest percentage of women on its board of any company listed on the Standard & Poor's 500 Index.

"As a member of Navient's board of directors, Barry Williams was involved in the process of expanding the diversity of experience, gender, ethnicity, industry and generation in the boardroom," said William Diefenderfer, chairman of the board. "We thank him for his leadership in opening the doors to higher education and to help future leaders navigate the path to financial success."

Williams is founder and president of Williams Pacific Ventures, a consulting and investment company. He serves on the boards of directors of PG&E Corp. and CH2M Hill Companies. He is a former board director for Northwestern Mutual Life Insurance Co. and Simpson Manufacturing Co. Williams was also previously a member of the Sallie Mae board of directors, and played an integral role in the creation of Navient.

Williams earned a bachelor's degree from Harvard University. He also received a Juris Doctor and Master of Business Administration degrees jointly from Harvard Law School and Harvard Business School. He lives in the San Francisco Bay area.
